The Montgomerie family's dairy farm near Ochiltree, Ayrshire is a busy place with 280 cows producing two million litres of milk a year. In today's competitive economic market, they are looking to maximise every last drop of milk and energy.

Financial controller Caroline Montgomerie explains, "Energy is one of our biggest costs and is vital to our farm. We milk the cows twice a day so we use a lot of energy in the milking parlour. Dairy farming is tough right now - milk prices are low, but overheads are high so we need to save where we can.

"So when our contract with EDF was up for renewal we decided to look at another energy provider as we had encountered a few problems. As Chairperson of the local National Farmers Union of Scotland (NFUS) branch I thought E.ON would be able to help, as they are one of our partners and are already helping other NFUS members save money on their energy bills.

"My initial phone call to E.ON was very positive and I received a quick response from their dedicated Partnerships team, who know the industry very well. They also gave us a really good price, saving us £5220 a year against our initial renewal offer.

"We needed an energy provider we could trust, that understood our business, provided good customer service and also reduced our energy bill and E.ON did just that."
